

Web guidelines

Our digital purpose

Inspire and support parents in becoming the best they can be: confident, capable, and loving life with their little ones.

Our website is deeper than a transaction. It provides practical guidance, access to the community and personalised, relevant content.

We allow parents to explore with confidence, and when ready to shop, enjoy the ease of finding the perfect products for the parenting journey.

The importance of consistency & following web standards

To be easy to learn and use, systems should use the same patterns everywhere inside the system and should also follow web-specific conventions.

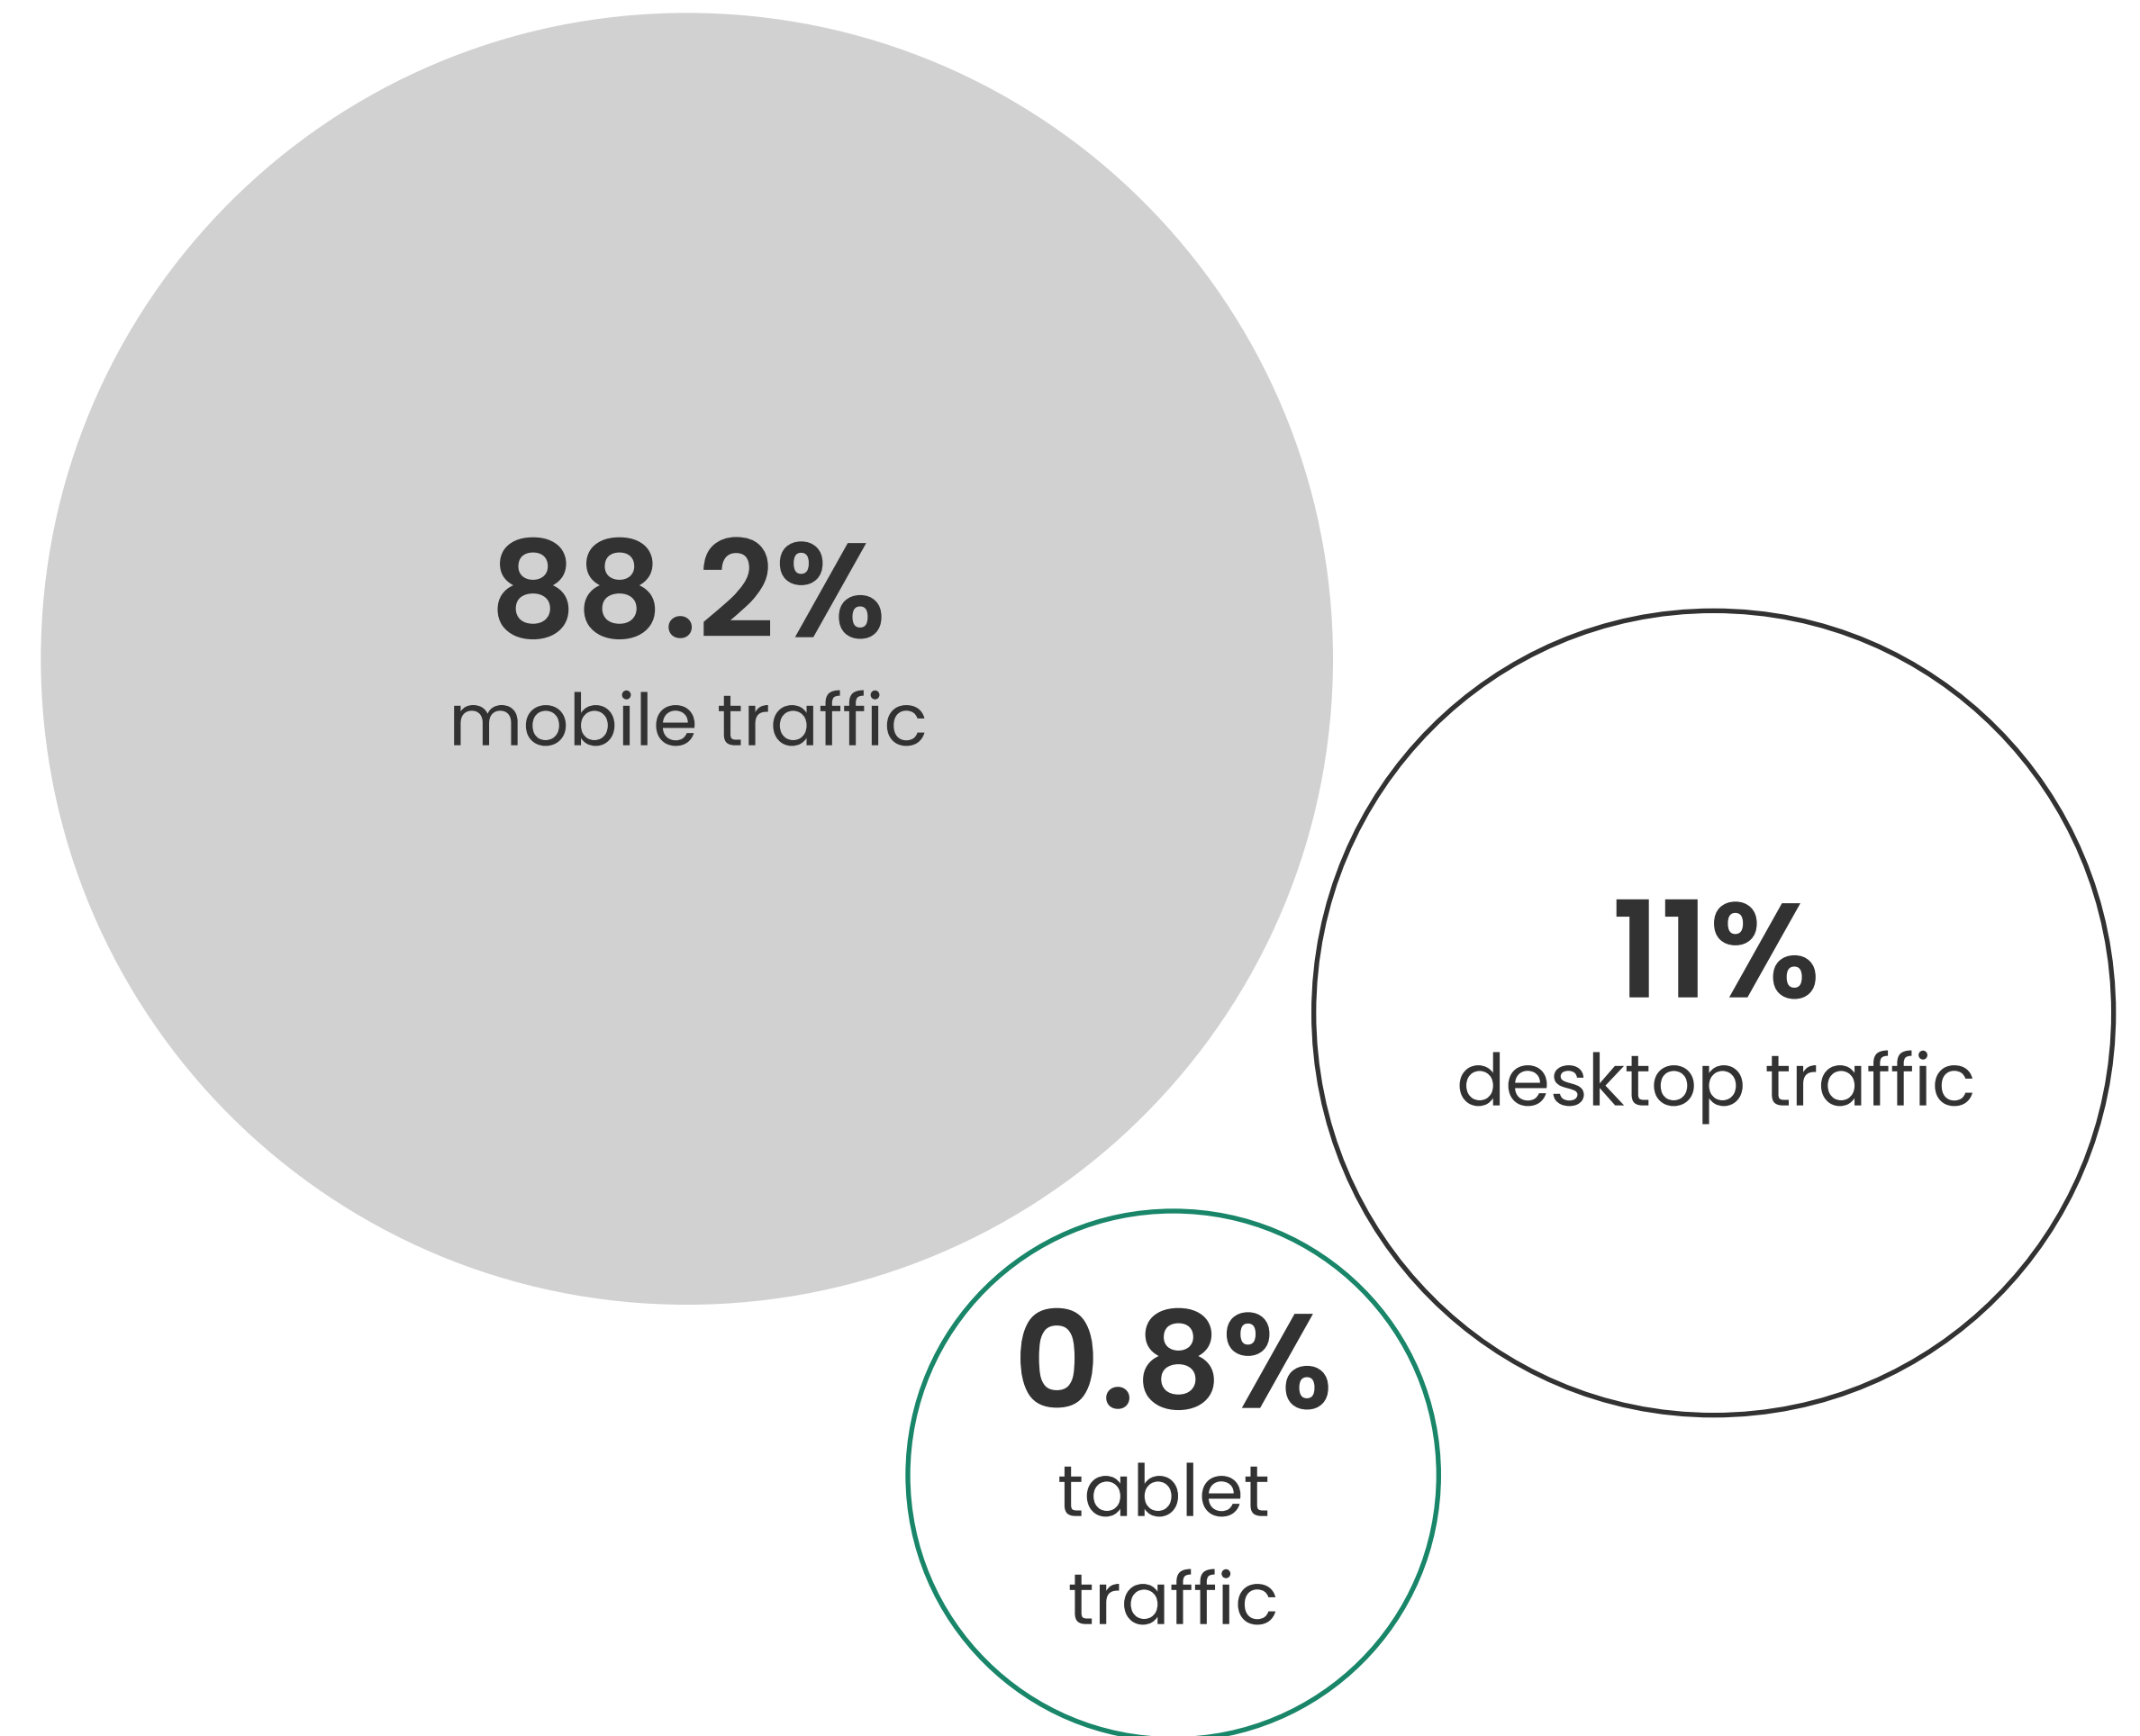

(NN Group)

80% or more of websites use the same design approach. Users strongly expect standard elements to work a certain way when they visit a new site because that's how things always work.

Jakob's Law states that people spend most of their time on products other than ours.

Mobile first

As well as prioritising the mobile experience because it makes up our largest chunk of traffic, a mobile first approach will encourage us to focus and minimise our content so it remains necessary and consumable.

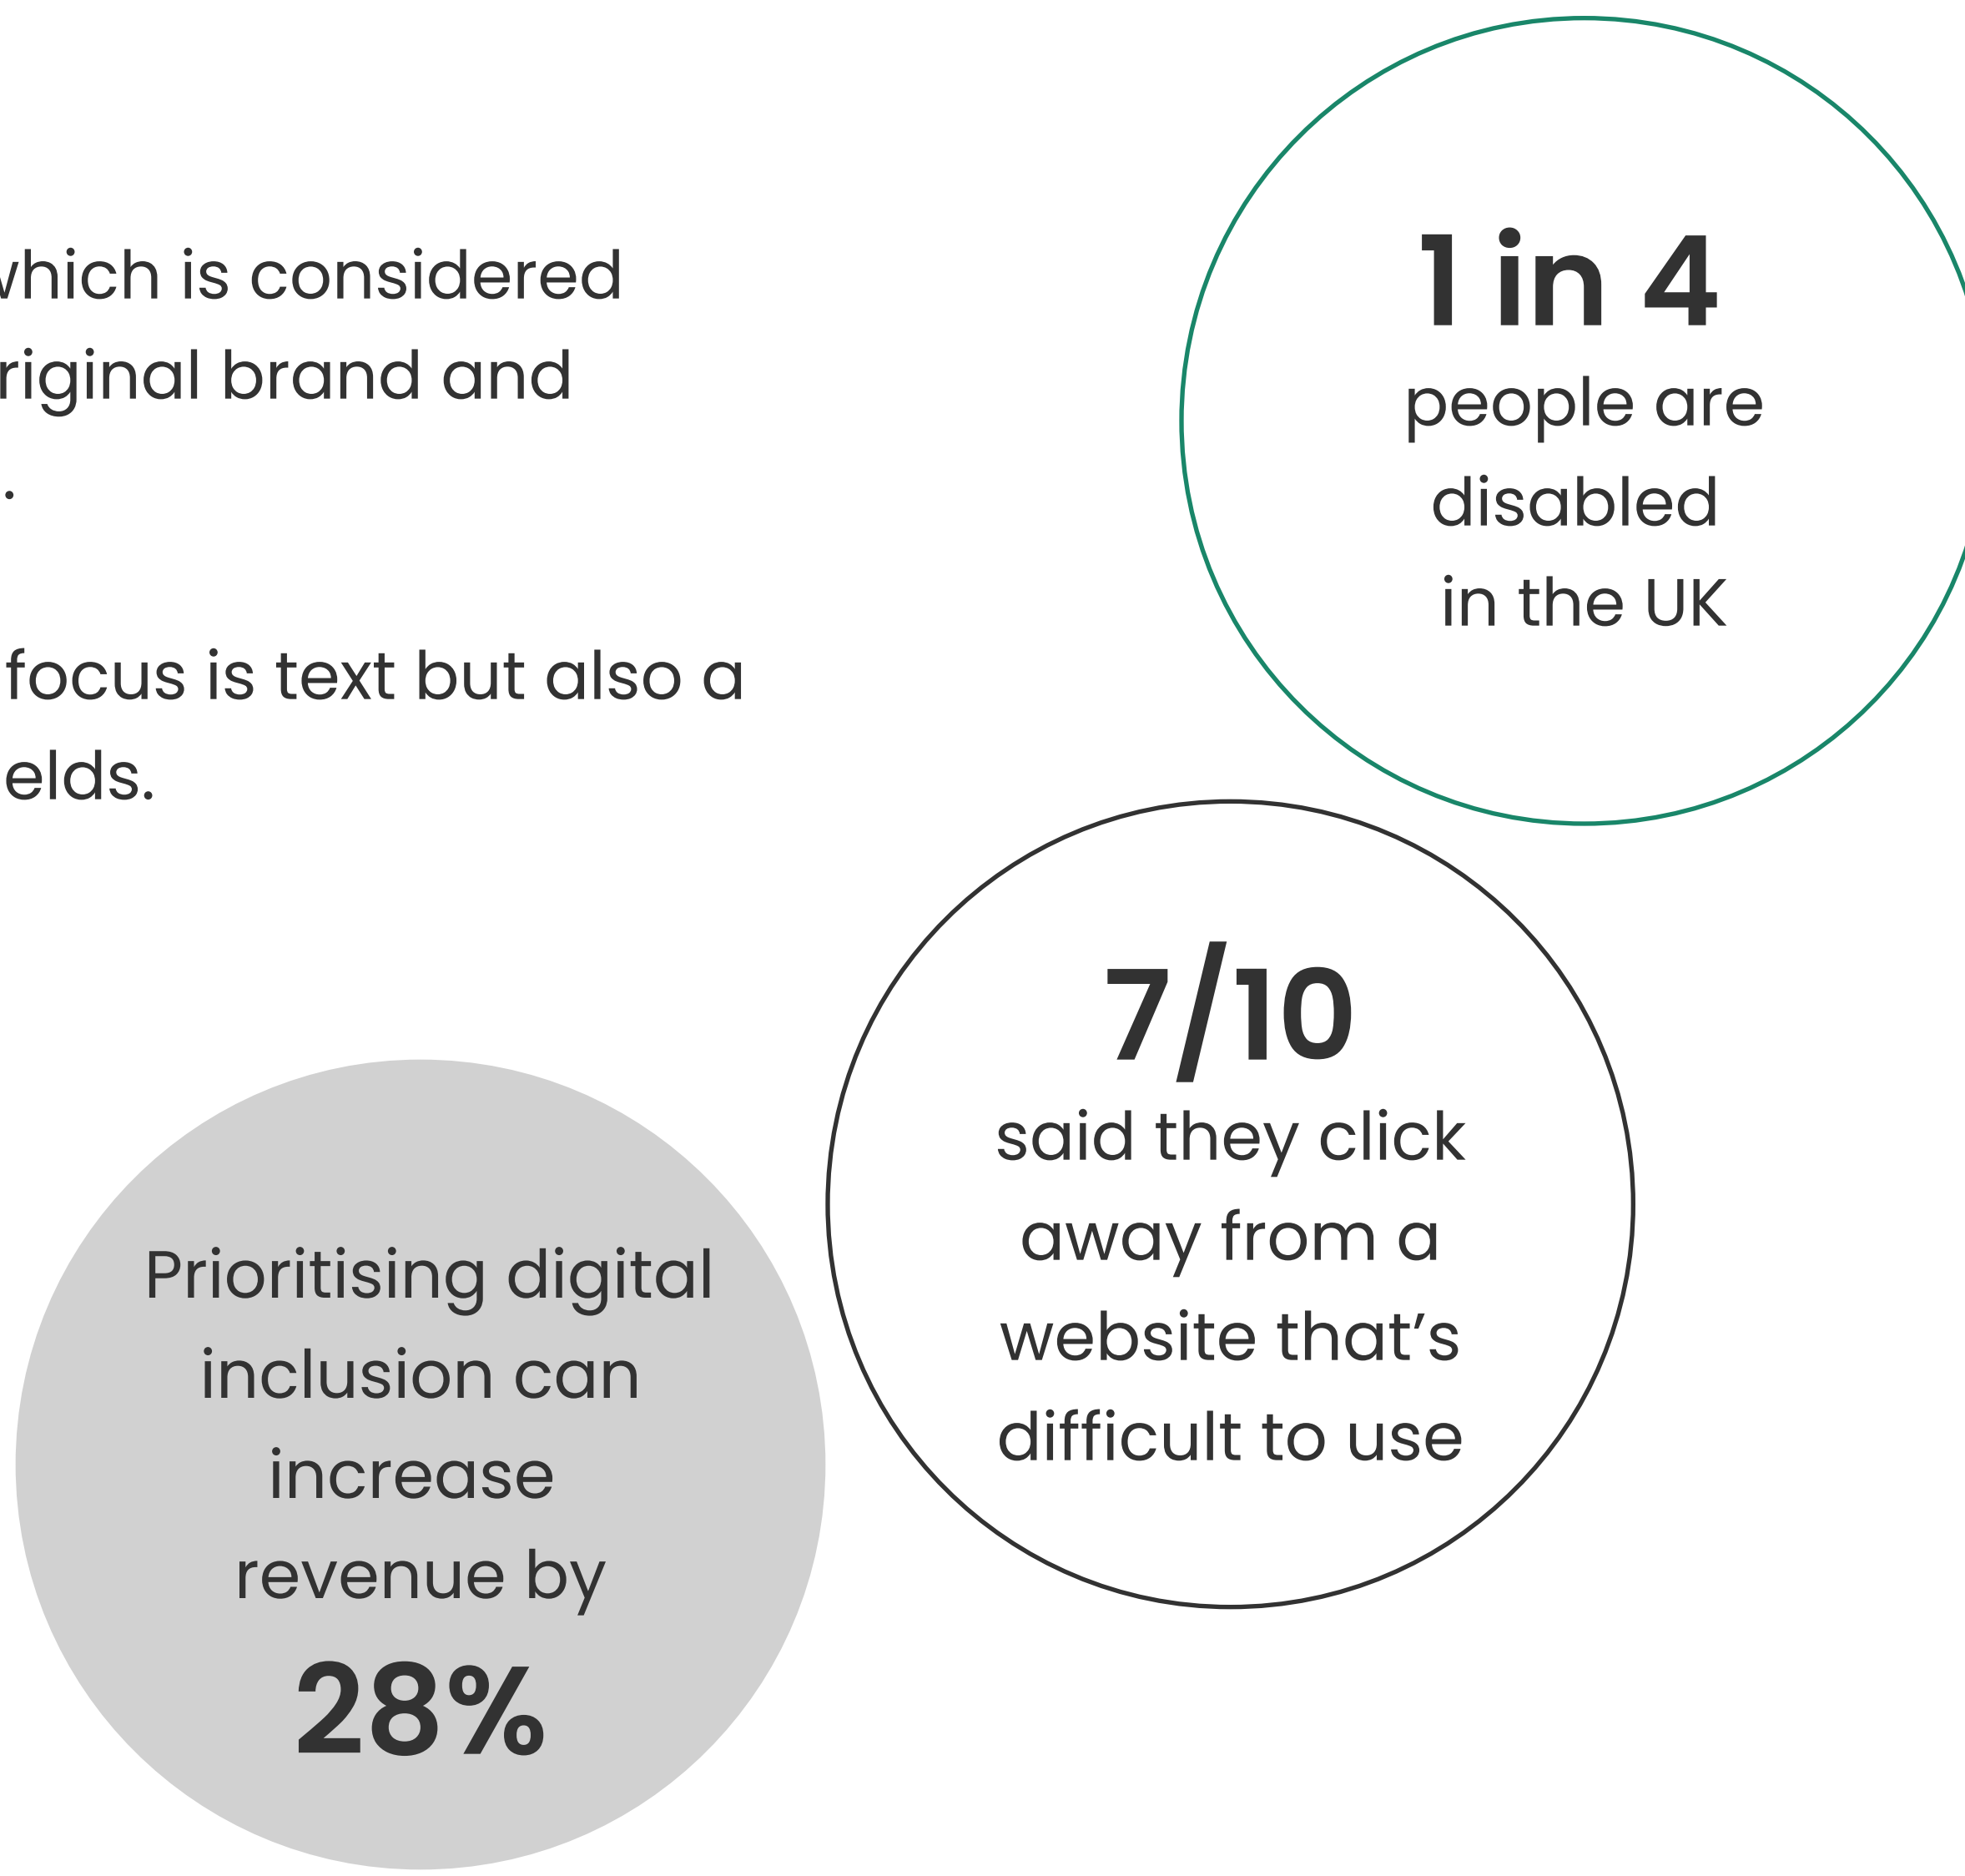

Accessibility

We should be aiming to meet AA accessibility standards which is considered sufficient. This means that colours may vary slightly from original brand and campaign colours but will be the closest accessible match.

Colours are checked via a contrast checker which primary focus is text but also a consideration for user interface components such as text fields.

Alt tags

Alt tags are required to ensure accessibility standards are met. Best practice for writing alt tags is to describe the image as clear as possible in the shortest way.

Conveying important messages in an image should be avoided but if this is the case then summarise it in the alt tag.

60–30–10 rule

The idea is to use 60% for the dominant colour (white), 30% for the secondary colour (cream, grey & blue grey) and 10% towards an accent colour (teal & logo grey) to create balance and a colour approach that can be quickly recognised.

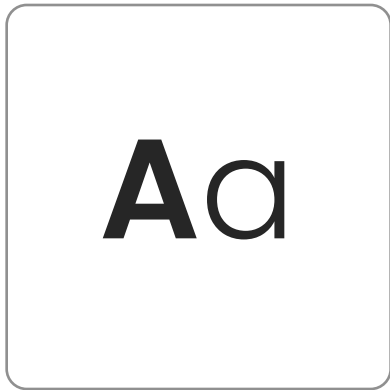

Typically, the dominant and secondary colours should be relatively neutral colours. Reserve the accent colour for what you want to stand out the most on your page — for example, the primary call to action.

Treatment for campaigns & other brands

These colours should only be used for banners images, videos or campaign logos and should not replace design system colours with the exception of campaign specific labels.

WEB GUIDELINES

Buttons

Primary button

The main call to action to be used once on almost every page, typically at the top

Add to Bag

14px, semibold

Secondary button

This is for secondary actions to be used within sections and can be used more than once

Discover Libro

(+ white variant)

Tertiary button

To be used as a supporting action to the primary or secondary button. It can also be used on it's own but only for repeated content (e.g. blog carousel)

Discover Libro

(+ white outline variant)

Link button

To be used as an alternative to the tertiary button or in a list view. Link buttons can be used with icons or arrows

Text

Mamas & Papas font is Poppins. All title and body text should be Charcoal:
#323232

Clear hierarchy between text styles and consistent use of these is key. Typically, headers will decrease in size and weight in order to help define this hierarchy.

Text usage

Body text width should be limited between 50–75 characters to make paragraphs of text more digestible.

(Baymard Institute)

Left align text as much as possible, this is better for accessibility.

Centre aligned text is fine for subtitles & summaries but anything over 3 lines should be left aligned.
